Overview

The National Academy of Social Insurance is pleased to announce the recipients of the 2021 Robert M. Ball Award for Outstanding Achievements in Social Insurance:

Robert Greenstein has dedicated his life to strengthening social insurance and other programs that enhance economic security. Bob's leadership built the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities (CBPP), which he founded in 1981 and led through 2020, into a major force for helping shape federal and state policy on public programs, from Medicaid to Unemployment Insurance to Social Security and more. Thanks to his leadership and CBPP's impactful work, millions of low- and moderate-income Americans have benefited from evidence-based policymaking.

Kilolo Kijakazi has been at the forefront of addressing economic and social issues affecting people of color and women, including structural racism and the racial and gender wealth gaps. Earlier this year, Kijakazi became Deputy Commissioner for Retirement and Disability Policy at the Social Security Administration (SSA), bringing her expertise on social insurance and retirement policy to lead the department's policy development and research activities.

"Bob and Kilolo are a natural duo for this year's Ball Award," said William Arnone, Chief Executive Officer of the Academy. "They have worked closely together over the years on key social insurance and related policy issues and have made truly extraordinary contributions to help improve the well-being of millions. Their latest collaboration was their serving so diligently on the Academy's Economic Security Study Panel, whose report will be issued soon. All of us owe them our deep gratitude for their wise insights, and we greatly look forward to honoring them in November."

Examples of Bob's and Kilolo's impact

The New York Times

America's Retirement Race Gap, and Ideas for Closing It

"The disparities stem from racism in the labor market, says Kilolo Kijakazi, a fellow at the Urban Institute who has written extensively on income, wealth and race. "We have a history of discrimination in hiring, pay, promotions and benefits. Discrimination in hiring also contributes to occupational segregation," she said."

The Washington Post

Opinion: Bob Greenstein's life proves the Washington cynics wrong

"In the battle for the Affordable Care Act, Greenstein sought a change in its employer mandate so it wouldn't inadvertently hurt low-income women with children. When told by the Obama administration it could not sign off on the change if the Business Roundtable opposed it, Greenstein's team negotiated successfully with the Roundtable."

How one mother is building generational wealth for her young son

"Building wealth that can be passed on has been difficult for people of color due to systemic barriers, said Kilolo Kijakazi, an Institute fellow at the Urban Institute. Occupational segregation has resulted in people of color at every level of education being employed in lower-paying jobs with fewer, if any, benefits, she said."

End of an era: Champion of programs for the poor retiring

"Bob transformed the Center into one of the most influential policy shapers in this country," says Ohio Sen. Sherrod Brown, a leading progressive Democrat. "His work has expanded opportunities for the lowest income children and families and ensured the country's prosperity is shared by the workers who created it, not just the wealthiest CEOs."

2021

About the Academy

Since the National Academy of Social Insurance was founded in 1986, it has provided rigorous inquiry and insights into the functioning of our nation's social insurance programs – Social Security, Medicare, Unemployment Insurance, and Workers' Compensation. Comprised of over 1,200 Members – the nation's top experts in social insurance and related policies and programs – the Academy studies how social insurance can continue to meet the changing needs of American families, employees, and employers, including uninsured or underinsured economic risks.

Social insurance encompasses broad-based systems that help workers and their families pool risks to avoid loss of income due to retirement, death, major illness, disability, and/or unemployment, and to ensure access to health care. Social insurance has been an integral part of American life for over a century, and arguably, will play an even bigger role as the population ages and automation, global competition, rising inequality, and other developments continue to transform the economy and create new risks for workers and their families.
